Lost For Words Edward St

Edward St Aubyn's Lost for Words is a weak satire on literary prizes, in particular the Booker Prize and the 2011 judging panel. Headed by former MI5 head turned novelist Stella Rimington, the 2011 panel chose to focus on accessible books for the public to enjoy - because, y'know, reading can be enjoyable - rather than pretentiously written books, which usually take home the prize.

Lost for Words by Edward St. Aubyn - Goodreads

St. Aubyn's Lost for Words, a book of significant literary accomplishment, gives the lie to the idea that good fiction is dead. Its humor, intelligence, and awareness of the greater world is not only intact but sparkling, a book which, in its way, celebrates the values which serious readers accept and even admire.
